Teaching Experience

Statistics and Research Design. Taught a large lecture course on the use of statistics in psychology. Lectured on data analysis and experimental design, including analysis of variance, correlation, and regression. Cornell University, Fall 2005.

Introductory Psychology. Taught a large lecture course on topics in introductory psychology, emphasizing how psychology uses the scientific method to answer questions. Franklin & Marshall College, Fall 2001, Spring 2002.

Introductory Psychology Laboratory. Taught a laboratory section for the departmental introductory psychology course. Introduced students to the basis of experimental design and data analysis as we explored topics in perception, learning, and cognition. Franklin & Marshall College, Fall 2002.

Experimental Design and Statistics Laboratory. Taught a lab section for a research methods and statistics class. Lectured on experimental design and data analysis, helped students design, conduct, analyze, and write up experiments. Franklin & Marshall College, Spring 2003.

Cognitive Psychology. Taught on topics in cognitive psychology, cognitive development, and the psychology of language. Franklin & Marshall College, Fall 2001.

Research Methods. Taught a mid-level undergraduate course for psychology majors on methods used in psychological research, emphasizing how to interpret the results of research. University of Minnesota, Winter and Spring 1998.

Cognitive Development. Co-taught an upper-level undergraduate course covering cognitive development from infancy to adolescence, with an emphasis on applied topics in education. University of Minnesota, Summer 1997.

Introduction to Child Psychology. Taught an introductory undergraduate survey course on topics in child development. University of Minnesota, Winter 1996.

Teaching assistant. Introduction to Child Psychology; Cognitive Development; Genetics, Ethology, and Development; Infancy. Designed assignments to be completed during discussion sections for a departmental introductory child psychology course, led discussion sections, coordinated the efforts of other teaching assistants, taught sessions on observational research methods, graded student papers, and kept course records. University of Minnesota, 1994-1998.

Research mentor. Mentored two undergraduate students writing senior theses. Met with students in weekly reading groups as we discussed articles and designed new experiments. Supervised undergraduate research assistants as they designed projects, tested subjects, coded videotapes, analyzed data, and wrote up their experiments. Some students went on to present the results of our research in a poster at an international conference on child development. University of Minnesota, Indiana University, Franklin & Marshall College, and Cornell University, 1995-1997, 1999-present.
